Holloway's Pills
AND
Holloway's Ointment.

THIS grand principle that operates in these wonderful medicines, is the power that they possess in purifying the turgid blood, and expelling corrupt humors from the system.

Holloway's Pills consist of a careful and peculiar admixture of the finest Vegetable Extracts, Herbs and Medicinal Gums. Possessing not a grain of mineral in their combination, they never expose those who use them to any danger, at any time or season. No mother need hesitate to prescribe them to her children, and the most delicate constitutions can use them with as great a benefit as the most vigorous and powerful frame.

HOLLOWAY & CO., Sole Proprietors,
78 Maiden Lane, New York.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment are sold at 25 cents, 62½ cts. and $1 per box or pot. A great saving is made by buying the large sizes.
No mother can afford to be without them.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Written for the Beaver Argus.

TWO SELECT MARRIAGES.

BY JESSIE.

"Oh dear! May, what shall I do? Adolphus LeRay is worrying the life out of me. Indeed I fully expect a proposal to-night. How he can expect for a moment that any one could deign to take notice of him, with his dandified airs, is more than I can see. He perfectly disgusts me with his 'ways' and perfectly chawming's and all such stuff. He is a regular fop."

"So you don't like him?" said May.

"Like him? No indeed, I fairly hate him. Do you like him?"

"I don't know, that is, I never saw him but once, and then he disgusted me so, that I'll never ventured near him since."

Violet Woodburn was the only daughter of fond and indulgent parents. May Everton, was her dearest friend; and had been ever since she could remember.

"May," said Violet, "you were always good at getting out of scrapes when we were in school, now, can't you think of some way for me to get rid of him?"

"Is he coming to-night?"

"Yes," said Violet.

"All right, come down to the arbor, and I will tell you of a plan that just came into my head. I think it will answer very well."

We will not listen to their conversation, suffice it to say that at five o'clock that evening, Violet was dressed and waiting for Mr. LeRay. She had not long to wait, for very soon her maid brought up a card with, "Adolphus LeRay" printed in full. Violet ran down stairs and with difficulty repressing a smile, opened the door and entered the parlor.

"Good evening, Mr. LeRay"

"Good evening; ah—Miss Woodburn."

After a few moments silence; "this is pleasant weather we are having," said Violet.

"Oh, Yes! It is splendid, delightful; we have had chawming weather, Miss Woodburn, (drawing his chair closer to the one in which Violet was seated.) What do you think I came here for to-day?"

"I am sure I have not the least idea," said she demurely.

"Well, I came on very important business; at least it is important to me."

"Indeed? is it with father? If so you should have gone to the store."

"Oh, no, it is not with your father that I have business, but with yourself."

"With me?" Said she in well feigned astonishment, "why what can you possibly want with me?"

"Oh, Miss Violet, you surely know why I came here to-night."

"Why Mr. LeRay, how can I know what business you have with me, when you have not told me what it is."

"Oh, Violet, my darling, you must surely know that I have long loved you. You must love me now sweetest for if you do not, I am afraid I should die. Will you be mine?"

"Oh Adolphus," said she blushing prettily,

"Answer me my idol, 'yes' or 'no,' My whole future depends on that little word, if you say yes, I shall be happy for life, if you say no, I will be miserable."

"Yes, Adolphus, if you want me to say it so badly," dropping her head upon his shoulder. "But have you asked father," added she looking up.

"No, my queen, but I will stay to dinner and ask him then."

"But, Adolphus, he is very busy at the store and sent up word that he would not be home to dinner. You could go down there though, and ask him, and then return and tell me the result of the interview."

"Very well, my own Violet, but I dislike to leave you for a short time even. The moments are days away from you. My tender heart grieves to part with you," said he, clasping her in his arms and imprinting a kiss upon her lips.

She accompanied him to the door, and as soon as he was at the bottom of the steps, ran quickly into the parlor and moved back one of the window curtains, disclosing May seated therein.

"Well, May," said Violet, "was that part of the programme acted to suit you."

"You could not have done it better," was May's answer. "Now Vi, if you let this thing drop you will never hear the last of it."

"I don't intend to let it drop," said Violet. "Father would be surprised at that note, wouldn't he?"

"Yes indeed, he will think you are at some new piece of mischief."

"Well, he will not be very far from right, we are at a pretty good piece of mischief. There is one thing May, that I am afraid of."

"What is that?"

"I am afraid father will not consent to let me marry Fred Lorraine."

"Why, has he proposed yet?"

"Yes, this afternoon, while you were over home, you know, just after we came out of the arbor, I said yes, and referred him to papa. I told him all about our plans for LeRay and you just ought to have heard him laugh."

Just then there was a rap at the door. Violet ran to the window.

"Oh May, get behind the curtain quick. It is LeRay already."

May was already hid, and Violet had barely time to sit down beside another window, pick up a book, and pretend to be reading, when he was shown into the room by the servant.

"Oh, my peerless queen, my own Violet! I cannot give you up!"

"My own Adolphus! What is the matter?" cried Violet, springing to his side.

"Oh darling, your father has forbidden me ever to speak to you of love. He says you are too young; and that, if you were older, he could find somebody that was more worthy of you than I am."

Violet fainted now.

"Oh my, what shall I do? I never was in such a fix in my life. Better ring for a servant, I guess."

Just then, Violet found it convenient to open her eyes.

"My darling has revived," murmured he. "I was going to ring for a servant."

"Oh Adolphus! I cannot live without you. I would go any place with you."

"Then let us fly," said he. "Your papa would, surely forgive us, when he sees how great is our love, how exceedingly great is our devotion."

"I am sure he would," said Violet.

"Then remember, darling, at the end of the avenue, on next Thursday evening, I will await you with a carriage at eight o'clock."

"Yes, dearest Adolphus, I will be there, but we must part now, for papa may come home at any time, and he would be very angry if you were here."

"Well, good-by then, my own star, my soul, my life; I must go, but give me one farewell kiss."

Violet complied; again accompanied him to the door, and then rejoined May in the parlor.

"Getting along splendidly!" was her comment. "It was rather close behind the curtains; I am glad it is over."

"So am I," said Violet. "I had the worst part of it though."

"But, Vi., may be he does love you?" said May.

"Love me? Yes, I guess so. Didn't cousin Ralph hear him telling a crowd of puppies, like himself, about the splendid heiress he was going to catch. 'I like her well enough,' said he, 'but I love her money.' By the way, May dear, it seems to me you are a little bit in love yourself, are n't you?"

"With whom?" said May, quietly.

"With a certain cousin of mine; Ralph, by name."

"Well," said May, "I may as well tell you; we are engaged, and have been ever since last Sunday evening.

"Why May Everton! Why didn't you tell me before?"

"I didn't like to," said May.

"There is another ring at the door bell," said Violet, going to the window. "It is Fred Loraine, May. Are you going behind the curtains again?"

"No, thank you, I don't believe I will this time. Hearing one 'lover's conversation' is enough for one day."

A moment later, Mr. Fred Loraine entered.

"Good evening, ladies," said he.

"Good evening, Mr. Loraine," was responded.

After a few remarks on the weather, and other uninteresting topics, May arose, and asking the other two to excuse her, left the room and went upstairs to have a chat with Mrs. Woodburn. After she had left the room, Violet went over to Fred, and laying her hand on his shoulder, said:

"Well, Fred, what did papa say?"

"He said no, you were too young to think of marriage at all; and, that he would forbid me to enter the house if ever I spoke to you of love; but, my darling, I will not give you up; I have a plan already. You promised to elope with LeRay, next Thursday. Now, as you are not going to fulfil that engagement, I want you to make one with me. You say your father is going to Philadelphia for goods next Thursday morning?"

"Yes," said Violet.

"Well, then next Thursday evening you will be married to me in your own house. Your mother is willing, is she not?"

"Yes, Fred."

"Well, don't you see your way clear now? Your father will relent and forgive us, and everything turn out as nicely as can be. Won't you, darling?"

"Yes, Fred, if you wan't me to; and May will help us. By the way, Fred, did Ralph tell you of their engagement?"

"No; are they?"

"Yes; May told me this afternoon. But, as I told Adolphus, you must go now, for if father should come home and find you here he would be very angry. Good-by, Fred."

"Good-by, darling. But wait, one word before we part. I came across the sweetest nook you ever saw, over in the grove, right beside the old rock we used to play on. If you will come to the edge of the grove I will meet you there, and we will go to the place together."

"When?" said Violet.

"To-morrow evening at five o'clock."

"Very well, I will be there. Now good-bye till to-morrow."

"Good-bye."

After Fred had turned the corner, Violet ran up stairs.

"Well," said May, as she came in, "what comes next on the programme?"

"Another elopement," said Violet. "Well, I declare, Vi. what will you do next?"

"Are you going to run off with Fred?"

"Not exactly, we are going to get married next Thursday in this house; that leaves me two days to get ready in."

"I will come over to-morrow morning, and stay all day, and help you," said May, "but I must go home now."

"Oh, pshaw! stay for supper."

"I can't, somebody might call this evening, and I always like to be at home when any one calls."

"Oh, yes," said Violet laughingly, "I had forgotten poor Ralph altogether, you had better hurry, he might be there before you get home."

"I am going as soon as I can get my thin s on," was May's reply, and she was soon walking down the avenue toward her home.

Violet lay awake a long time that night thinking, and wondering how it would turn out. The next morning May came over, and they were soon hard at work sewing, and fixing everthing up nicely. That evening Violet took her hat and said she was going to take a walk, started for the grove, where she was met by Fred.

"Am I on time," said she.

"Yes, dearest, but I came a little before time, so you would not get here before I did, and have to wait on me."

They talked over their plans, as all lovers will, and after they had talked about an hour, bade each other good-bye and went home. As Violet came into the sitting room, her father said:

"Why, Violet, where have you been, I've been waiting for you to to play chess with me for ever so long. I think you must take pretty long walks."

"I walked slowly," said Violet.

"Well, come now and play a few games."

"Yes, father,"

And they played on for awhile, but Mr. Woodburn soon tired of it, because—as he said—Violet would not let any one beat but herself.

"Oh, pshaw," said he, "you are the greatest cheat around, you won't let me get a single game."

"Oh, well," said Violet, "I will sing and play for you, that will do won't it?"

"Yes daughter."

She played "Rory O'Moore," "Bonny Doon" and some of the old Scotch airs, her father liked so well. After she had played awhile she turned around to ask her father a question, and noticed that he was asleep.

"Not very appreciative," said she quietly, and went up to bed. The next morning was clear and beautiful, and when Violet awoke, her first thought was what a pretty day to get married on. Just then she heard her father calling her.

"Violet, hurry down dear, I am going soon."

She hurried down stairs, bade him good-bye, ate her breakfast,

The Beaver Argus.

J. WEYAND, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Beaver, Pa., December 4, 1872.

"It is with feelings of deep regret that we have to announce this week the death of Horace Greeley. The sad event took place at Tarrytown on last Friday evening at 7, p. m. A good man and the most eminent journalist of the age has departed. The following interesting particulars, touching his illness and death are copied from the Tribune of last Saturday: So far as any of his associates knew, Mr. Greeley was in almost as good health as usual, when, on the day after the election, he wrote his card announcing his resumption of editorial charge of the Tribune. His sleeplessness was known to have become greatly worse, but for years he had suffered more or less from the same difficulty, and, as is now, sufficient allowance had not been made for the intense strain upon him throughout the summer, especially during the month of his wife's illness. But it soon became evident that his strength was unequal to the hard task to which he set himself. He wrote only three or four careful articles, one of them half a column in length. The most notable, perhaps, was that entitled "Conclusions," wherein he summed up his views of the canvass. In all, he wrote less than three and a half columns after his return, contributing to only four issues of the paper. Two or three times he handed his assistants short articles, saying, "There is an idea worth using, but I haven't felt able to work it out properly. You had better put it in shape." At last, on Tuesday, 12th inst., he abandoned the effort to visit the office regularly and sent for the family physician of Mr. A. J. Johnson, the friend with whom he was a guest, and in whose house his wife had died. An effort was made to induce sleep, but he grew steadily worse until it became evident that his case was critical. Dr. Geo. S. Choate and others were called in consultation, and finally it was decided to take him to Dr. Choate's residence, two or three miles distant from Greeley's own country house, at Chappaqua. Here he received the unintermittiug attention of Drs. Choate, Brown, and Sequad. Dr. Brown and others were called in consultation. The insomania had developed into inflammation of the brain, and under this the enervated patient rapidly sank. At times he was delirious, at other times as clear headed as ever. He lost flesh and strength with startling rapidity, and in a few days perceptibly his speedy death forced itself into unwilling recognition. It was not, however, until Thursday that his associates and family brought themselves to admit it. Even then they still clung to his faith in the vigor of his constitution. On Wednesday night he failed very rapidly. Thursday afternoon and evening he seemed somewhat easier. During the night he slept uneasy, muttering occasionally and frequently raising his right hand. Toward morning he was more quiet, and between eight and nine o'clock he fell into a nearly unconscious condition, which continued, with some interruptions, but many of them, in consequence of his extreme weakness, and apparent inability to finish what he begun, were unintelligible. About noon, however, he said quite distinctly, and with some force "I know that my Redeemer liveth"

During the day he recognized various people, his daughter many times, the members of his household at Chappaqua, Mr. John R. Stuart and Mr. Reid. On the whole he suffered little, he seemed to have no more than the ordinary restlessness which accompanies the last stage of the disease. During the day his extremities were cold and there was no pulse at the wrist; the action of the heart was very intermittent and constantly diminishing in force. He had not asked for water or been willing to drink it since his stay at Dr. Choate's, but during Friday he asked for it frequently, and up to within half an hour of the end he manifested in various ways the consciousness of what was going on around him and even answered in monosyllables and inteligently questions addressed to him. About half-past three he said very distinctly, "It is done!" and beyond the briefest answers to questions, this was his last utterance. His youngest daughter, Miss Gabrielle, was with him through Thursday evening. Throughout Friday the elder daughter, Miss Ida, was in constant attendance, as she had been during the whole of his illness, and that of Mrs. Greeley before him. Other members of his Chappaqua household were present, with Mr. and Mrs. John R. Stuart, and a few other friends. Nothing that science or affection could suggest was wanting to ease the last hours. The wintry night had fairly set in when the inevitable hour came. Without sleighs were running to and fro, bearing to Chappaqua, the nearest telegraph station, the latest bulletins which thousands of anxious hearts in the great city near by kept demanding. Within the daughter and a few others stood near the dying man, who remained conscious and seemingly rational and free from pain, though now too weak to speak. In the adjoining room sat one or two more friends and the physicians. At ten minutes before seven o'clock the watchers drew back in reverent stillness from the bedside. The great editor was gone in peace, after so many struggles, in honor after so much obloquy,

"The melancholy announcement of the death of the editor and founder of the Tribune, though for a few days it had been expected by his family and intimate friends, fell upon us with all the shock of a sudden calamity. He had reached, indeed, a ripe old age, but time had not laid its withering touch upon him. His splendid constitution easily bore the strain of enormous labor. His mind was as fresh and strong and suggestive as in the prime of life. His generous impulses were unchilled by disheartening experience. Through the trying campaign that has just closed his physical vigor, his tact, his intellectual activity, surprised even those who knew him best, and seemed to promise many years of usefulness. It is certain that no history of the most critical period of our national life ever can be written in which Horace Greeley will not be a conspicuous figure. But the noblest career in this is that which is given up to others' wants. The successful life is that which is worn out in conflict with wrong and woe. The only ambition worth following was the ambition to alleviate human misery and leave the world a little better than he found it. That he had done this was the consolation which brightened his last days and assured him that he had not lived in vain.—It is not for us, in the first hour of our loss, to paint his character or catalogue his virtues. Although for several months we have missed the inspiration of his presence and guidance of his wise counsel, his spirit has never ceased to animate those chosen to continue his works, and the close bond of sympathy between the chief and his assistants has never been broken. We leave his praise to the poor whom he succored; to the slowly whom he lifted up; to the slave whose back he saved from the lash; to the oppressed whose wrongs he made his own."

It will be seen that this Senatorial District has its full share, viz; How George V. GENERAL McDOWELL has been appointed Major General to fill the vacancy caused by the death of General Meade. A change of Department Commanders is also made. General McDowell goes to the South, General Hancock to the East, and General Terry is assigned to the command of the Department of Dakota, vacated by General Hancock. General McDowell's promotion is well received almost everywhere.

GENERAL JOSEPH R. HAWLEY, M. C., elect, is moved to say in his newspaper:

The Hartford Courant, both in its printed pages and through the spoken utterances of its editor, has, time and again, expressed its opinions without reserve, to the effect that Simon Cameron is a corrupt man, and a corrupter of others, and is altogether unfit to hold any public office.

The above is respectfully referred to the editor of the Radical, A few weeks ago our neighbor, in an editorial of nearly two columns in length, sought to make his readers believe that this same "Simon Cameron" was one of the most uncomplaining and upright men of the nation. The Radical, if our recollection serves us did not put it on thick enough to call him "honest Simon" but the drift of its argument was to show that all the charges made in reference to his dishonesty and corrupt practices were false in general and false in particular and that no man in Pennsylvania deserved better things than General Cameron. Now, whom are we to believe? M. S. Quay says that Cameron is an upright, reliable man, while General Hawley says that he is a corrupt man himself and a corupter of others. Can it be that the former writes in his own interest and for pay, and the latter in the interest of the public only? We are afraid that the people generally will take an affirmative view of the question here propounded.

THE cartoon in Harpers Weekly of last Saturday, in which Cameron and Hartranft are standing before President Grant, armed with revolvers and bowie knives, and demanding the appointment of one of their friends in Philadelphia as post-master, is "stiring things up" in this State. It is reported that Cameron and Hartranft have demanded an apology from the publishers of the Weekly—the Harper brothers—and in the event of their refusal to make it, a prosecution for libel is threatened. We do not believe that an apology will be tendered, and we are quite sure that a prosecution will not be commenced. Neither Cameron nor Hartranft are anxious to get before the courts. In fact to keep out of them is their best hold, and none know this better than themselves.

Gov. elect, Hartranft, was one of the persons in the Cameron crowd, who waited upon president Grant a couple of weeks ago and insisted upon the appointment of a man as Post-master at Philadelphia, "who had been very active in helping to roll up the magnificant majority in that city for the Republican party." After the President informed the committee that he would enforce the civil service rules in that case and therefore their man could not be appointed, Hartranft is reported to have said: God God, gentleman, was it for this that Pennsylvania gave him 135,000 majority."

If the Governor elect of Pennsylvania is correctly reported in this instance, he is clearly a statesman of whom all the people may well feel proud; but lest our admiration may be thrown about indiscriminately we earnestly hope that the State may not turn up another like him. One man of such transcendent ideas is sufficient for any commonwealth.

MR. G. W. PALMER, of Luzerne county, proposed in the Constitutional Convention, the other day to change the civil office oath to read as follows:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be), that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of Pennsylvania, and that I will perform the duties of my office with fidelity, and according to the best of my ability, and that I have not personally or otherwise paid or contributed any money or other valuable thing or made any promise, to directly or indirectly influence any vote, or to induce any other person to vote or work in my favor at the election at which I was chosen to fill the said office, and have not accepted, nor will I accept, or receive, directly or indirectly, any money or other valuable thing, from any corporation, company or person for any vote or influence I may give or withhold or for the performance, or nonperformance of any official act."

This oath shall in the case of all State officers be filed and recorded in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth, and in the case of county and township officers, in the prothonotaries office of their respective counties.

Any person who shal swear falsely, or knowingly violate his oath, shall be guilty of perjury, and in addition to the penalties thereof, shall forfeit his office, and be forever disqualified from holding any office of profit or trust in this Commonwealth.

If a change of the above kind is made are we sure that it will not remain dead on our statute book? There is a law in existence now prohibiting the State Treasurer from loaning out the State funds and appropriating the interest to his own use; yet from fifty to fifty-eight banks in this commonwealth are now doing business on these same funds, and are paying the Treasurer a fixed rate of interest on his deposits: A portion of this interest is used for corrupt political purposes, and the balance divided between the State Treasurer and the gang who connive at or assist him in evading the law. Not a cent of this interest ever finds its way into the State Treasury.

The Treasurer takes an oath annually to support the laws of the State, and our representatives at Harrisburg know all the while that he not only does not support the law here referred to, but also that he commits legal perjury every time he violates it. They stand by and see one of their own enactments disobeyed with impunity, and an officer of their own creation perjure himself without making an effort to prevent it or even directing his attention to the astounding facts. Public sentiment seems to sanction all this, and we very much fear that a change of the civil office oath would be treated with similar disrespect.

GALLANT "Old Joe Hooker," was at the reunion at Dayton, Ohio, last week, of the Army of the Cumberland. The "boys" called the battle sisted upon a speech. He gratified them and concluded his remarks by giving the "rings" of this country the following whack. Referring first to General Thomas he said:

"He, like the great King of Prussia, was of a character so broad, so large, that he imposed it upon every soldier in the army. It was this that caused the success of King William in the Prussian war. He impressed his own character upon every citizen, every soldier in Prussia, and such a thing as a ring, as a dishonest man in Prussia, are exceptions.—Our country is filled with rings, and if we do not get rid of them, we will meet the same fate as the French; if we don't get rid of rings the country will go to the devil."

General Hooker is not the only person in this country, who believes that "rings" or in other words, "Organized bands of plunderers," are rapidly hurrying this country on to ruin, and yet strange to say, many, otherwise good men, spend most of their time in denouncing those who see the danger and are striving to avert it. How long, O Lord, will men be blind and suffer these things to continue?

CONGRESS convened on last Monday, and the President's message was delivered to both Houses on the same day. It contains nothing sensational, but is a business like document and can be read with profit by the whole people. We will publish it in the next issue of the ARGUS.

JAY GOULD, one of the most daring operators in this country, and for many years a partner of "Jim" Fisk, was arrested one day last week on a charge of having stolen only $9,000,000 from the company while he was President of the Erie Railroad. As society runs at the present time, no one seems to think less of Gould since his arrest than they did before; but if some poor, uninfluential rascal had taken $25 from the same company, he would have been tried, convicted, and sent to prison in a hurry. Nor ever after would himself or family have had any standing "in court." This is the way of the world just now.

HERE AND THERE.

—J. K. McKee, of Venango county owns a cat and a small dog that have for a long time been on very intimate terms. A few days ago the cat became the mother of four kittens, and was furnished lodging in the barn. What was the surprise of Mr. McKee, on looking out, to behold the cat and dog coming to the house, each with a kitten cradled in their jaws. The dog put down its burden in as good condition as the most natural protector. This is gallantry worthy of imitation. "A friend in need is a friend indeed.

—There was a grand flagellation at Newcastle, Del., last Saturday. Seven colored culprits and one white do. were pilloried and whipped. The way in which the prisoners endured their tortures is elaborately described in The Wilmington Commercial. In one case "the flesh quivered and the tears flowed freely." Another victim took his punishment "without a groan." A third" showed no sign of pain except a slight jerking of the muscles." A mulatto, after sixty lashes, which he bore without shrinking though the blood flowed freely' jumped up, striking his heels together and saying." I told you I was the man to stand it." Finally came John Caldwell, "an honest, intelligent white man, respectable in appearance," who stood one hour in the pillory, and then took twenty lashes with the utmost sang froid. For him being white, the largest sympathy was expressed by the crowd. How long does Delaware propose to keep up this sort of thing, to the discredit and disgust of the whole nation?

—A most extraordinary female lunatic is reported to be at Denver (Col.), to which place she went from Chicago, for her health. The peculiarity of the case is Mrs. Clara Faircloth (for such is her name) is, that she has not slept fifteen hours in nearly seven weeks. She moves about the city like an invalid, at times has spasms, and continually begs for morphine. There is, of course, diseased action of the brain. There is also a great crowd of consumptives thronging to Denver, some of whom improve and some do not.

—Now the numerous and respectable family of Browns come in for their chance. An old lady bearing that rare surname has just died intestate in London, leaving a fortune of $1,500,000 with nobody to inherit it. Now we needn't say that there is a plenty of Browns in America—the John Browns, the James Browns, the Isaac Browns, and the William Browns with all their wives and daughters and aunts and grandmothers Brown. Let a convention of the Brown family be held at once in the Boston Coliseum, the only building in the United States large enough to accommodate such a meeting! And should the British Courts refuse to give up the money let an enormous army of Browns be organized to extort justice by an invasion of Great Britain.

—A wonderful police incident is recorded in Boston. A bare-headed man, last Saturday evening, rushed into one of the police stations, with hair bristling, and informed the officer that over in their street, at No. so-and-so, they had a thief in the closet. Over went the myrmidons, and found three strong men braced against the door, behind which they supposed the thief to be, since the woman had seen him enter by it. The officers drew their clubs, and after this act of simple precaution, opened the door and found—nobody!

—The Philadelphia Ledger of November 26th says: The female shareholders only of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, it is publicly announced, will be paid their dividends on the 30th inst. After that date, when applying for their dividends, they will have to take their place in the line of applicants and be paid in order. With all proper respect for and deference to the sex in matters personal, we yield to no one, but in matters of business, involving dollars and cents, we much question the policy or justice of any discrimination as between classes of creditors. The postponment of payment for a day of a large sum of money, like that of a dividend due on a large capital, or of two days, as happens to be the case of the Pennsylvania railroad at its next payment, (the 30th being succeeded by a Sunday,) gives rise to the suspicion that somebody may wish to make interest on the amount withheld.

—We take the following from the Louisville Courier-Journal, under date Novemer 27: Charles E. Hulse, of Jeffersonville, died in New Albany on Sunday morning, of confluent small pox, after an illness of eleven days. The circumstances attending his sickness and death were at once sad and romantic. He was engaged to be married to Miss Mollie Miller, a young lady living in New Albany, the marriage being fixed for some time during the holiday season. Three weeks ago Miss Miller was taken with the small pox and a congestive chill setting in with the disease, she died. During her sickness, notwithstanding its contagious and fatal character, Mr. Hulse was constant in his attendance at her bedside, caring tenderly for her. His devotion produced the result which he could not but have anticipated.—A short week after Miss Millers death Mr. Hulse was prostrated with the same disease. His grief at loss of his betrothed had rendered him indifferent to the result; and, indeed, he made up his mind to die from the beginning of his illness, telling several of his friends, and writing to his relatives, that he would not and did not care to recover, and begging them not to jeopardize their lives by coming to see him.

—It is announced that Gen. Horace Porter, having been tendered the Vice-Presidency of the Pullman Palace Car Company, will resign his commission as Major in the Ordinance Department in order to accept the civil position. It is reported that Gen. Babcock will fill the office of private secretary to the President in place of Porter, and that Mr. Douglass, the lawful incumbent of that office, will continue in his subordinate character in the reception-room with Gen. Dent.

—A correspondent of the New York Sun informs that luminary that Col. Thomas A. Scott will be a candidate for United States Senator at the next session of the Pennsylvania Legislature. The statement is not entitled to belief because it appears in the Sun, while it might be true in spite of it. Col. Quay, however, forgot or failed to mention his name among the list of worthies he enumerated in his Harirsburg correspondence to the Radical as desiring to succeed Gen. Cameron, in the event of his not seeking a re-election, and he is supposed to know all about it. It is probable, however, that if Col. Scott wished to be elected United States Senator, Senator Cameron's wishes as to re-election or otherwise might not be regarded by him as a matter of momentous importance. He has no equal in the State in intellectual force, and his influence is immense. But it is likely that he finds more congenial employment for his great faculties in his present pursuits than he would in the Senate, and more honor too, and is satisfied.—Chambersburg Repository.

Approaching Arrival of Five Hundred Jewish Families from Roumania.

A meeting will be held this evening, in the synagogue Bnai Jeshurun, West Thirty-fourth street, to make arrangements for receiving about 5,000 Jews who are about to emigrate from Roumania to this country. Rabbi H. Vidaver, M. Strasburger, and many prominent Israelites are taking great interest in the movement. At the last advices 500 families had resolved to leave Roumania for New York, and as no society has been formed to assist the emigrauts they will pay their own expenses. The majority of the men may be classed as skilled mechanics. The whole of them are thriving and industrious.—N. Y. Times, Nov. 19.

ELOQUENT TRIBUTE.

Speech of Judge Agnew at the Complimentary Banquet Tendered to Chief Justice Thompson.

MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN OF THE BAR: I would that I possessed sufficient words of eloquence to express, on this occasion, the deep feelings of my own heart; and to portray to you the great loss, the Bench, the Bar and the State are about to suffer, in the retirement of our Chief Justice. Even you gentlemen, familiar as you are with his great qualities, can scarcely realize the extent of this loss. You like those who for a brief while, look upon the passing images of a panorama, see only some of its striking beauties; but we of the Bench starting with its beginning and ending with its closing scene, see all its shifting and changing views.

Let me now recount our mutual loss, but first allow me to guard against unfair criticism. The judicial fitness of the members of the Bench run in parallel lines, yet different in their endings. When a line falls off, we who remain must support the severed ends; and like the fish bars to a railroad track, hold up the broken joint, that the car of justice may pass over it safely and without a jar. While we now turn with sorrow to the setting sun of our retiring brother, and follow with regretful eyes his departing rays the twilight left is a moment of gloom. But we must turn our eyes to the Orient to meet and to welcome the beams of a new and rising orb, and hail them with confidence and hope.

Then avoiding anything invidious, let me dwell a moment on the magnitude of our loss. The ripe experience and variety of judicial knowledge of the Chief Justice tower like a mountain over the hills that surround its base. Let me exhibit this by a short review of his knowledge, first, of what I may term regional law, the jurisprudence of that tract of country described in the act of 3 April, 1792, as lying north and west of the rivers Ohio and Allegheny and Connewago creek; a vast region which has given rise to a greater variety of original title, and a larger source of litigation and to more important and numerous questions than any other known territory. Few among you, and perhaps none under the age of forty years, have a recollection of the controversies which rent that region and retarded its improvement for more than a generation. Having begun my professional life in the same year and in the same region with the Chief Justice, perhaps it belongs to me more than to another to speak of this region.

After the final extinction of the Indian title by the treaty of Fort McIntosh (now Beaver), the Commonwealth in 1783 divided this vast tract of country into two grand sections by a line due west from the mouth of Mogulbughton creek, on the Allegheny to the Ohio boundary, passing about six miles to the south of New Castle. The northern section she devoted to donations to the soldiers of the Pennsylvania line, according to her promise in the resolution of 1779; and the southern she appropriated to the redemption of the certificates of depreciation she had issued to the soldiers for their pay according to a scale of depreciation from the continental currency.

The peculiar mode prescribed for the survey of the donation lands, and the irregularities in the surveys themselves, made in a wilderness, and in the fear of Indian hostility gave rise to numerous and complicated questions of title. The exemption of these lands from taxation in the hands of the soldiers, and the frequent assignments of the patents to eastern holders, and the sales of perhaps two-thirds or one-half of all the tracts for taxes, gave birth to other questions. After this came the act of 3d April, 1792, which was Pandora's box to this unfortunate region. This act opened all the unsurveyed lands of the whole region, including the struck district of donation lands withdrawn from the wheels, and also the unsold depreciation lands, part of which only was sold at the coffee house in Philadelphia. It provided for two modes of acquiring title—by warrant and survey, and by settlement and survey. The 9th section, under pain of forfeiture, required settlements to be made on their tracts, by the holders of warrants, within two years from their dates. The Indian hostilities prevented performance of this condition, and the warrants were supposed to be forfeited.

The treaty of General Wayne at Fort Greenville was ratified on the 22nd of December, 1795, and in the spring of 1796, supposing the warrants forfeited, the settlers swarmed over this whole region. Then began a scene of strife and litigation unequaled in judicial annals. The questions were numerous, complicated and difficult with scarcely a precedent as a guide. I could tell you of descriptive warrants taking title from the date, vague warrants taking title from the survey, shifted warrants taking title from the return and acceptance of survey, vacating warrants to enforce the forfeiture for non-settlement, et id genus omne, and I could tell you of improvements and settlements with and without personal residence, abandments, cum animo revertendi, and without, of compromises, under the act of 1811 and many other phases of settlement rights, but time will not permit. Added to these were the tax sales of these lands and the infinite variety of questions arising under the statute of limitation, and the different species of title. All these and much more than I have related constituted a mass of regional law, and a sum of litigation, of which the Chief Justice can say Maqua pars fui. These questions still arise to some extent and are presented to our court.

There is another branch of law of which the Chief Justice is a fit representative. It may be termed rural law, in contradistinction to those laws which regulate the affairs of cities. I refer to his knowledge of the law relating to roads, bridges, boroughs, townships, school districts, the poor, desertions, &c. Then follows his knowledge of political law—I mean political in its governmental—not its partisan sense; involving the Constitution and the institutions of the State, and its legislation. A member, early and at several times of the Legislature and Speaker of the House, he had large opportunities of knowledge in this department. Federal laws also came under the dominion of his acquisition, made familiar by his frequent elections to Congress. Crowning all is his knowledge of general law, the result of fifteen years service on the Supreme Bench. Nothing has escaped his rich experience, whether it be a Philadelphia ground rent or municipal lien, or Schuylkill county mining lease, a Venango county oil privileg, or a Western manufacturing or mining company.

From this hasty review we learn the magnitude of our loss. But though his official life is about to expire, we are not as those without hope. Though dead he yet speaketh, and his works live on. Forty-one volumes of State reports will attest his labors and his rich judicial experience. These are a monument more solid than granite, more durable than brass, and more pure than the polished shaft of Italy's marble. When you and I and all who here inhabit, shall have laid down our busy lives at death's universal call, and our bones shall have mouldered into native dust, this memorial of his labors will remain, a precious legacy to his native State. Thither unborn generations will come to drink at the fountain of his lore, and learn to prize the learning, the logic and the good sense of our venerated Chief Justice.

And now, in bidding our Brother a friendly farewell, let us still hope that we who remain shall ever have his sympathy and his support; and that his spirit will yet linger among the fields of his former labors in kind and affectionate memory. Et moriens reminiscitur Argos

ABOUT ADAM.

Some Recollections of the man Without a Mother-in-Law—His Marriage, Apple Trees, Election Bets, Etc.

We have always believed in Adam. We have looked upon him as one to whom mankind has been under peculiar obligations. Standing by the side of Eve as the first married man, dressed in a sumptous bear skin, he appears to us as we look backward through the dim vista of the centuries upon him as a person indispensable to the future of his race. Certain philosophers would try to make us believe that that majestic figure is a monkey; and sometimes the results of human events, elections for instance, seem unaccountable, except on the Darwinian hypothesis. But we hold that the man who would reflect upon the dear departed in such an ungrateful way does not deserve the sympathies of his kind; as for ourselves, we intend to nail our fig leaf to the mast and cling to old Adam. What he knew about farming served him in good stead to the hour of his disappointment, and, though over much given to lying in the shade and munching apples, we know that when he found himself one morning on the wrong side of a certain garden gate he indulged in no unmanly repinings—he neither whimpered over his fate nor made faces and shook his fist at the guardinn of the forfeited premises, but diligently set himself to work to develope the ordinary crab into the New York pippin.

There are certain times when we like to withdraw our minds from the turmoil of the present age and dwell upon the character of this grand old patriarch, Sometimes, even when our desks may be covered with accounts lost on the election, we get thinking on Adam and don't care how big the Liberal majority is in New York. Adam was never troubled about election bets, or anything else, except the grafts in his orchard. He had no mother-in-law, and his wife never bothered him with her milliner's bill. He had a natural antipathy to snakes, but he was never worried over missing shirt buttons.

He never supported an unsuccessful candidate for President and saw his hopes of a seat in the cabinet grow dimmer and dimmer as the reports came in. Nor were his ears deafened and his feelings hurt by the booming of the cannon of the radical party over at New Albany. Neither did he receive the ironical and malicious congratulations of his neighbors the morning after the election on the fortitude with which he bore up under adverse news. His eyes were never offended by the crowing roosters and flaunting banners of his opponents; for, barring his one unfortunate speculation in the undertaken at the instance of his sleeping partner—when the devil made a corner in the apples, his life was eminently a success.

To be sure, he had never had the proud consciousness of having established principles that he knew would ultimately win in spite of the influence of a hostile administration that for a while brought inevitable defeat upon him, nor did he have the pleasure of seeing the old party lines of ignorance and prejudice broken into fragments and disappearing before his vigorous assaults; but as he sat upon the hills facing the sunset, in the happy time before his eldest boy began to be fast and run around with strange women from the land of Nod, he could watch his shooting scions without a care, nor trouble himself with the future of his offspring.

He stands for us as the grand example of [illegible] Hear the noise of unsympathetic thousands shouting over empty victories, and smell the fumes of powder burnt in honor of a fitful and ephemerel triumph, and thoughts go back six thousand years or more to grand old Adam, and then—

"Not a wave of trouble rolls across the peaceful breast."

—A negro, who was suspected of surreptitiously meddling with his neighbor's fruit, being caught in a garden by moonlight, nonplussed his detectors by raising his eyes, clasping his hands, and piously exclaiming: "Good Lord! dis yere darkey can't go nowheres to pray any more, with out being 'sturbed!"

Preparing to go West.—Mr. William E. Hice of Hanover township, this county had a public sale on the 29st inst., with a view of moving to Kansas in a short time. A Puzzle Story.—A Dunblin chambermaid is said to have got twelve commercial travelers into eleven bed-rooms, and yet to have given each a separate room. Here we have the eleven bedrooms:

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11

"Now," said she, "if two of you gentlemen will go into No. 1 bed-room, and wait there a few minutes, I'll find a spare room for one of you as soon as I've shown the others to their rooms."

Well, now, having thus bestowed two gentleman in No. 1, she put the third in No. 2, the fourth in No. 3, the fifth in No. 4, the sixth in No. 5, the seventh in No. 6, the eighth in No. 7 the ninth in No. 8, the tenth in No. 9, and the eleventh in No. 10. She then came back to No. 1, where, you will remember, she had left the twelfth gentleman along with the first, and said: "I've now accomodated all the rest, and have still a room to spare; so, if one of you will come with me you will find it empty." Thus the twelfth man got his bed-room. Of course there is a hole in the sauce-pan somewhere, but I leave the reader to determine exactly where the fallacy is, with a warning to think twice before deciding as to which, if any, of the travelers was the "odd man out."—Chambers' Journal.

Look Out for Them.—Our friend, Mr. Jas. N. White, of North Strabane township, informs us that a couple of confidence men called on him on last Friday and made an effort to swindle him out of some money. Their plans were the following: One of them represented himself as a son of the Hon. John Covode, and claimed to be the agent of a secret political organization. He stated that he was appointed sub-agent in each election district in this county, to receive certain funds for disbursement in the said district. They represented that Mr. White had been recommended as a suitable person for North Strabane by certain prominent citizens of Washington, saying that it was necessary for Mr. White to pay them $50, whereupon they would go immediately to Washington and draw $2,000 from the bank which there awaited them, $1,000 being for Mr. White's own use and the other $1,000 to be used for electioneering purposes in his township or so much of it as he saw fit to use. Upon Mr. White refusing to comply, they offered to take $10, and finally $2, saying that it was necessary for him to pay something before he could receive the $2,000. When Mr. White asked them why they were distributing money now that the election was over they said that they wished to keep up an organization, and the money was in the bank for him and he might as well have it. It is needless to say that Mr. White refused to be so easily swindled. When they left they stated that they were going to Washington and would return on Monday with further evidence of their authority to act. They did not go to Washington, nor did they return to Mr. White's. When last seen, they were inquiring the way to the nearest station where they might take the Pittsburgh train.—Canonsburg Herald.

Mr. Thomas Fields, who drives a "one horse shay," informed us the other evening that his propellor had the "shoots," or "snoots" or something of that kind. We looked at Thomas' horse and at once became satisfied that "he had it." We gave the usual advice—rest, care, rubbing and soft feed. No charges.

Curious Conduct of a Body of Electors.—Corydon, Pa., a little town below Warren, gave fifty majority for Hartranft. Presidential election day the Board of Inspectors, with the majority of the town were down the river with rafts. The few Democrats and Republicans who were left got together and talked the matter over and agreed that it was not worth while to open the polls, that the election before was a fair trial and that they would report the town fifty majority for Grant and let it go. They accordingly did so and in the State canvass Corydon will be found to be fifty majority for Grant although not a vote was polled.

Singular Superstition.—A correspondent of the Albany (N. Y.) Evening Times relates a conversation with a superstitious night watchman on the New York Central railroad: "I believe in spirits and ghosts, I know such things to exist. If you will come up in April I will convince you." He then told of the phantom train that every year comes up the road with the body of Abraham Lincoln.

Regularly in the month of April, about midnight, the air on the track becomes very keen and cutting. On either side it is warm and still. Every watch when he feels this air steps off the track and sits down to watch. Soon after the pilot engine, with long black streamers, and a band with black instruments, playing dirges, grinning skeletons sitting all about the car will pass noiselessly along, and the very air grows black.

If it is moonlight clouds always come over the moon, and the music seems to linger, as if frozen with horror. A few moments after and the phantom train glides by. Flags and streamers hang about. The track ahead seems covered with a black carpet, and the wheels are draped with the same. The coffin of the murdered Lincoln is seen lying on the centre of the car, and all about it in the air and train behind are vast numbers of blue coated men, some with coffins on their backs, others leaning on them. It seems then that all the armies that died during the war are escorting the phantom train of the President.

The wind, if blowing, dies away at once, and over all the earth a solemn hush, almost stifling, prevails. If a train was passing, its noise would be drowned in the silence, and the phantom train would ride over it. Clocks and watches would always stop, and when looked at are found to be from 5 to 8 minutes behind. Everywhere on the road, about the 27th of April, the time of watches and trains is found suddenly behind. This, said the leading watchman, was from the passage of the phantom train.

The Horse Malady.—If any one can understand how a human being, suffering from a bad cold, with cough, nasal discharge, pain in the chest, and soreness of the throat, shouldibe treated, he ought to know how to manage a horse affected with the same symptoms. True we cannot administer the warm footbath, the vapor bath, nor the sweating pack, so conveniently to horses, nor is it necessary. As the horse is accustomed to more simple habits, and can live without artificial heat, more simple remedial measures will answer. But any animal when sick, can be treated hygenically, and that is all that is necessary.

We can at least follow the good advice which Hippocrates gave more than two thousand years ago: "If you cannot do any good, you can at least avoid doing harm." We can refuse to bleed, do without the drugs, and give nature a chance. The sick horse should have a clean room away from the miasms of the stable, protected from chilling winds but with an abundant supply of fresh water.

Once a day the whole surface should be sponged with tepid water, and rubbed thoroughly dry with flannel cloths, and afterwards covered with a warm blanket. He may drink as much pure water but not very cold, as he will; do not coax or force him to eat until he inclines to. Keep a few good apples and carrots before him constantly. They are better medicine than anything that can be found in the drug shop.—From Science of Health.

Dr. S. W. Cunningham, who was, for many years, engaged in the practice of medicine in this county, removed to Steubenville, Ohio, sometime ago. Last spring he emigrated further west—to Illinois, we believe—but not being satisfied with his new location, he has returned to Steubenville, settled down among his former acquaintances again, and has hung out his shingle with a view of curing all who may call upon him for medical assistance. We earnestly hope that he may be successful in business and practice.

Trails.—There may be those who really admire a lady's street dress, with a trail, but we must confess that it has not been our good fortune to encounter any one who does. Even ladies themselves detest them, and for the very best reasons in the world; yet Mrs. Grundy issues her mandates, and they obey. We never see a woman dragging after her a trail which gathers filthas it goes along all the pavements and crossings, but our thoughts unvoluntarily lead us to think of the condition of the underneath garments.

What must be the state of a woman's stockings after being brought in contact with a trail as filthly as such a thing must necessarily be at the close of half a days shopping, and what the condition of the skirts? We shudder to think of it, and feel almost unwilling to believe that a nice, sweet, charming woman could ever be persuaded to wear one. Yet we see hundreds of women sporting them, of whom it would be rank heresy to assert that they were not both clean and charming.

All we have to say in the matter is that appearances are against them, and moreover that our ladies never looked so neat and tidy as when a year ago, they wore dresses that did not sweep the street. We'll wager a big apple that the advocates of trails have big feet. Who will take the bet.

The Libel Law.—Mr. Baer, a member of the Constitutional Convention, has proposed a reform that has long been needed, and that is, that in libel suits it may be shown by way of complete defence that the publication was true and was made with good motives and for justifiable ends. Anything short of that should not be a defence although it should go in mitigation of damages, but to punish a publisher for telling the truth when public and private interests require it to be told is an outrage on the rights of the citizen as well as the decent liberty of the press. It is not at all an obscure matter why Pennsylvania Legislatures have been so favorable to stringent libel laws. First, muzzle the press and then the unscrupulous representatives at Harrisburg could carry on their jobbery and corruption with impunity. The people, however, are interested in having an unfettered press, and a libel law could easily be framed which would hold publishers to all proper responsibility without utterly silencing them. It is a reproach to the intelligence of this State that the present libel law has so long disgraced the statute books. The best way to secure the citizens and the press is to put some provision in the Constitution establishing the law of libel on a sensible and just foundation.—Pitts. Chronicle.

Sheriff White has but four boarders at the present time. Towards March he will have accommodated a host of them.

OAKLAND GROVE, BEAVER CO., PA.
NEW BRIGHTON, Nov 20, 1872.

Col. J. WETAND, Editor "Beaver Argus," and to the honest citizens of Beaver county, GREETING.

The land pirates of Penn'a: who are they? Bill Tweed, of New-York, he or was, the leader of Tammany which controled the politics and robbed the city and State of millions of treasure. For months past he has been hiding to avoid trial and conviction for his crimes. Old Simon Cameron is the Tammany chief of the political plunderers whose headquarters are at Harrisburg. Your Senator is a member of that ring, and will vote in the State Legislature to re-elect Cameron to the United States Senate.

M. S. Quay is the leader of the Beaver county wing of the ring of land pirates whose chief is Old Simon. He leads, deceives, bribes, and drives his partisans to the polls and votes them at his will—or at the will of his master—for such persons as he chooses to place in nomination. He has the money of Cameron to assist; and, if there be any lack, the "unexpended balances" make good the deficiency in the corruption fund.

Who is M. S. Quay? Let me answer the question: Eight or ten years ago, he was a poor man. He has held no profitable office since, nor followed any lucrative legitimate pursuit. He was Colonel for a short time, in the army, but resigned after the first battle in which it was engaged. He then obtained a position in the war departments at higher salaries; was elected representative; but the salaries of all these positions would not much exceed expenses. Now is now worth thousands of dollars. How did he obtain this great wealth in so short a time? By unprincipled gambling and treachery in politics. Does any man suppose he came by his three large and costly blocks of buildings in Beaver; his large amount of railroad and other stocks, and his hotel in Philadelphia, through honest and legitimate means? If there be any who think so, they are to be filled for their credulity. He keeps a gambling room—No. 42, Girard House, Philadelphia. Such is the man who edits your family newspaper, and you are forced to read and pay for it, because he is your "Boss," just as Tweed was Tammany's "Boss." You are obliged to vote as he dictates; believe his falsehoods about Curtin, McClure, Forney, Col. Thomas A. Scott and others meeting up political difficulties with Old Cameron; and you are compelled to talk for, and defend him in your daily walk and conversation. Why? If some one will have the courage to ask him he will tell them next week; modesty forbids it at this time, especially as his tools—J. S. Rutan, editor of Beaver Conservative, and the little dog of the Press—dare not, over their own signature, nor editorially, reply to me, I admit I am neither grammatical nor rhetorical, but I dare either of them to reply. This may appear strange, but men who pretend to be capable of drawing up and legislating upon your statutory laws, and controling the editorial columns of a family newspaper, should be competent to reply to the charges set forth by a common farmer, if the truth of his utterances did not foreclose them. Gentlemen and scholars—neither of which they are—would reply. If they could, Beaver county in a century behind the intelligence of the age in selecting such men as J. S. Rutan to represent her in the State Senate, and M. S. Quay and Simon Cameron as political leaders.

The last ANDUS contains an expose of a fraud attempted to be palmed off upon the people of this county by a Philadelphia correspondent of the family paper —The Beaver Radical. To be a family newspaper it should be truthful, which that paper is not. I refer to the correspondence of M. S. Quay, giving an account of a banquet, or reunion of the opposing elements of the Republican party, at a hall in Philadelphia. I here say no such meeting was held. The only existence it ever had was in the brain of M. S. Quay, which is rank with deception.

Well, I cannot let up without noticing various matters which I am aware will be growled at by those who wear the collar of the Cameron ring. For instance: The Pittsburgh Commercial strives to cover the tracks of President Grant relative to his action in regard to the appointment of the Philadelphia Post-master, and civil service. His appointment of Fairman was right; he suited Forney—who, by the way, is a mere toady—by the appointment of Fairman; and he knew that Cameron owned Fairman. He knew Old Simon was the Senator from Pennsylvania who alone takes interest in appointments, and that he will say to the appointee "you can be confirmed as Post-master of Philadelphia if you agree to do as I bid you;" and, Mr. Fairman will consent; as Brigham did on another occasion. Cameron said to Fairman: "You must keep George U. Gregan in your office, because he voted for me for U. S. Senator; you must also keep a chap named John F. Price, I think; at all events he is saleable and is in the employ of my servant, M. S. Quay, and resides in New Brighton, Pa.; he is a sort of 'rousta bout,' and you will have to keep a sharp eye upon him, or he will sell you; but you must keep him because Quay wants him in the Philadelphia Post-office to answer a purpose of his own: he is well acquainted with the hand-writing of leading men of Beaver, and can render himself useful. Of course you can be confirmed in your appointment by the Senate, but then you must be obedient. The Post-offices have great power under the new rule. We can capture the letters and documents of the opposite party, as we have done, and beat them two to one all the time. Oh yes, Fairman, you will be confirmed; only keep all our boys in your office, and do as I tell you. Brigham did that, and his machine runs smoothly; you must do the same."

Mr. editor, Fairman will be confirmed Post-master of Philadelphia, and Quay will keep a tool in that office. If you have important matter to send to that city, secure some other than the mail service to convey your letters or documents: otherwise you have no security that your packages will not be broken.

M. S. Quay, in his anonymous letter to the Radical, speaks of Shurlock as clerk of the next House of Representatives at Harrisburg. It should be enough for Mr. Quay, that the person named has been repudiated by his fellow citizens of Beaver county whom he once mis-represented in that body; and that the sound of his name is an offence in honest ears. Gen. James M. Selfridge will be elected Clerk of the next House of Representatives; and it will not cost him a cent to buy off Dr. Shurlock; which is the object of Quay in presenting the latter's name before an offended public, in connection with that office.

With Bucher Swoope (Mara's counsel) for Attorney General, M. S. Quay for Secretary of the Commonwealth, the gambler Mackey, for State Treasurer and the sweet-scented Allen for Auditor General, the political, perfidy and rottenness of the new State Administration will be complete—fit for "treason, stratagems and the spoils." Watch your pocket-books when you go that way, gentlemen. Respectfully, &c.

W. W. IRWIN.

Additional Chinamen.—During the latter part of last week, so we are informed, about one hundred additional Chinese laborers arrived at Beaver Falls. They will go to work at once in the Cutlery works of that place. Those engaged there for some time past have made wonderful progress in their duties, and their good behavior has disarmed much of the prejudice at first originally entertained towards them.

Mrs. Julia Blaine, who left Beaver a couple of years ago for Colorado Springs, Colorado Territory, in quest of health in that climate, has reached her destination, it feels but little worse on account of the journey. It is to be hoped that the medicinal qualities of the Springs, and the temperate atmosphere of their locality will bring about a speedy and permanent restoration of her health.

Deputy Sheriff.—Mr. T. Noble of Beaver Falls has been appointed Deputy Sheriff of this county, by C. White Esq., who was elected Sheriff at the October election, and sworn in some ten days ago. Mr. Noble is chief, we understand, of the Democratic hosts of that place, and his appointment is a graceful recognition by the Sheriff elect of their respective positions attained by the public.

Economy in Coal.—An exchange says: The most practical suggestion yet made toward economy of coal, seems to be the use of gold bottoms in fire grates. It is claimed, and indeed proved, that in any fire place not excessively large, a plate of iron placed upon the grate will save the consumption of coal, reduce the smoke and leave a cheerful, free burning fire. Quite sufficient air enters through the bar, no poking is necessary, and the fire never goes out—all the coals are conserved. Any house holder can try this experiment, and reduce his coal bill, say thirty per cent., at the cost of a shilling.

After carefully reading one of the circulars of Wells' Grand Distribution, which takes place in Bridgeport, Conn., Dec. 10, 1872, we have become satisfied that it is an enterprise worthy the attention and patronage of all. It is a home affair, endorsed by all the leading citizens of Bridgeport, and the vast amount of property to be given away will afford an opportunity to hundreds of securing valuable gifts of various kinds, including Houses and Lots, Horses and Carriages, Bank Stock, Government Bonds, and many articles we have not space to enumerate. All are advised to send early to the Great Central Office of Wells' Grand Distribution, at Bridgeport, Conn., and secure a handsome Chromo or Engraving, ranging in price from $1 to $5, and a share in the Grand Distribution for each dollar's worth of pictures purchased.

A Poor House Director-ship.—The October election brought about a change in the Poor House Director-ship for this couty, Robt. Cooper esq., of Moon township retires and Mr John White of Hopewell township has taken his place. Mr. Cooper made an intelligent, efficient officer, and his retirement from the Board is a loss to the county. Mr. White has served in that capacity before, and we presume, understands its duties and responsibilities thoroughly.

Fifteenth Anniversary.—Last evening the new Methodist Episcopal Church at Beaver, of which Rev. W. H. Locke is pastor, was the scene of a most enjoyable affair. The present year will terminate the pastorate of Mr. L. over this charge, and as yesterday was the fifteenth anniversary of the marriage of the pastor and his wife, the members of the congregation determined to take advantage of the occasion to give some evidence of the high esteem in which they hold them. The arrangements were left with the ladies, invitations were issued, and last evening some two hundred citizens of Beaver and the surrounding country, embracing members of all denominations, attended a reception which was held at the church, the parsonage being too small to accommodate the crowd. After the reception a splendid supper was served up, and several hours were passed pleasantly in social intercourse. Mr. Locke and his lady were the recipients of many valuable presents, which will be esteemed as tokens of the regard of the donors.—Pitts. Chronicle Nov. 27.

Andersonville.—A correspondent writing to the Cincinnati Commercial from Andersonville, Ga., gives a description of the old prison grounds and the cemetery there. The stockade is falling to decay, and a year or two more will efface it entirely, except from our hearts and memories. The "dead line"—over which so many brave soldiers passed to the freedom of eternity rather than endure the misery of life—can only be traced here and there, for most of the marks in the last eight years have been obliterated. The thirty-five wells which the prisoners dug with cups and spoons remain just as they were left. And the wonderful spring, which was discovered one morning after a thunder storm flowing down the hillside, still yields its sweet pure water as freely now gratefully sought by the poor fellows as then. The cemetery, with its 13,000 graves, is on the slope of a beautiful hill. Over the quiet spot young trees give the cool shade which would have been so lives were ended under the scorching sun.

A sanguine young Ohio blacksmith wagered he could make himself the receptacle of four pints of raw whisky within fifteen minutes. Upon his tombstone will be inscribed the simple epitaph: "He smiled and died."

Any Soldier who enlisted in the military service of the United States prior to July 22d, 1861, and was actually mustered before August 6th, 1862, into any regiment, company or battery, that was accepted by the War Department, may learn something of pecuniary advantage to him by calling at my office, or addressing me by mail with stamp enclosed to pay return postage

River Business.—Joseph Walton esq. of Pittsburgh, who was appointed chairman of a committee several months ago at an Ohio River Improvement Convention at Cincinnati, to gather statistics touching the river trade, has submitted his report which gives the estimated trade of 872 towns and landings along the Ohio river between Pittsburgh and Cairo. Only such as have business exceeding 100,000 per annum are embraced in the list. But two landings in our county are on the list. They are thus referred to in the report:

"Rochester, Pa., miles from Pittsburgh, 26; Exports, copper, iron ore, &c., iron implements; Imports, logs, iron, &c., Estimated Value, $3,400,000. Remarks—Trade of Erie canal, &c.

Smith's Ferry, Pa., miles from Pittsburgh, 40; Exports, crude oil, whisky; Imports, groceries, &c.; Estimated Value, $500,000. Remarks—Oil wells, &c."

New Law and Real Estate Office in Rochester.—Our friends Messrs. Cameron and Marks have got their new office on New York Street, Rochester, opened up, and are now ready to transact all business entrusted to their care. Their location is immediately opposite S. J. Cross & Co's store. Messrs Cameron and Marks, in addition to the practice of law in our Courts and before Justices, will also engage in the Real Estate business. They solicit a share of the public patronage, and an acquaintance of several years duration assures us that all business placed in their hands will be promptly and carefully attended to.

Official Changes.—On last Saturday D. Singleton, esq., who has for the past six years filled the office of Register and Recorder of this county, retired from its duties, and is succeeded by Wm. L. Stokes, esq., who was elected at the October election. Mr. Singleton proved to be a very efficient and accommodating officer, and leaves of his official robes with the best wishes of the people for his future prosperity.

Thanksgiving Surprise.—On Thanksgiving evening a number of the members of the Presbyterian church of this place, gave their pastor, Rev. D. P. Lowary quite a joyful surprise. About 7½ o'clock, without any previous notice, they called on him at his residence, and after exchanging the usual salutations, they manifested their appreciation of their beloved Shepherd in a donation of a hundred and ten dollars ($1.10), which was presented by John F. Dravo esq., as follows:

MY BROTHER:—You seemed surprised at this unexpected gathering. You will learn that some things can be done wholesale as well as by retail; for these good people seem to have taken it into their heads, and hearts too, on this thanksgiving evening, to make you their loved Pastor, a "wholesale" visit, hoping that you may long continue the relation of Pastor and people are among the most important and interesting of all the varied relations of human society.

The relation of Pastor to the congregation is indeed a laborious one; the care of souls, the prosperity of the Church are laid upon him; the constant instruction of the people in things "new and old," demanded at his hands; his time ceaselessly employed; his mind always on the stretch; a kind of chemical laboratory, where all he sees, all he hears, all he reads, are transmuted into current intellectual coinage for the edification of those to whom he is called to minister.

It is also an important relation, the interests intrusted to his supervision are eternal interests, taxing all his resources, all his energies, that in the great day "nothing may be lacking. Watching for souls as he who must give an account.

But there are reciprocal relations binding the people to the Pastor as well as the Pastor to the people. The relation of loving sympathy with him in the great work in which he is engaged; a generous disposition to hold up his hands and cheer his heart, in the work of winning souls to Christ. Then they are to provide for his temporal wants, that he may neither be encumbered nor embarrassed in the duties of his holy office.

These kind people, my dear brother, to whom it is your privilege, as well as pleasure to minister, permeated with these convictions, sympathizing with you in your afflictions and labors, anxious to give some additional substantial testimonial of their high appreciation and love for you personally, and their abiding sympathy with you in the blessed work of the Master, have put into my hands this sealed envelope and deputed me to present it to you; and I most cheerfully do assure you that the contents thereof will tell the story of your people's love more eloquently than any words of mine. Permit me to say this is a most pleasant duty on my part, a member of another church, with strong preferences of its peculiarities; yet, nevertheless, we are after all, one, having "one Lord, one baptism, one faith" and journeying to the same common home. God bless you, my brother, and prosper you and your people, amen.

At the close of these remarks which were most attentively heard, and to which there was a hearty amen, Mr. Lowary arose to respond. He had been ill for two weeks, and was scarcely able to stand upon his feet at all; his reply was therefore necessarily brief. We give a mere abstract. He was wholly taken by surprise not having had even an intimation that a gift to him was thought of, and, in consequence his reply was wholly impromptu. Moreover he was nearly overcome by the emotions which swelledup from his grateful heart so as that he was nearly incapable of speaking. He began by expressing his admiration for the wholesale way of doing this business; he liked it much better than the retail. Passing from this he responded in feeling terms to the sentiment embodied in the eloquent and appropriate remarks of Mr. Dravo. In reference to the relations existing between "Pastor and People" he could but deplore his own past insufficiency, he had through ill-health and from other causes been unable to do all that was in his heart to do; he hoped when once again rescued through the goodness of God to be more efficient. As to the relations sustained by the people toward him he could but say, truth compelled it, that a kinder, more generous and liberal people could not be found in the bounds of this Synod; nay, nor in the bounds of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States. They have always been prompt, kind, loving. He then referred to the relation of his dear Brother Dravo, through whom this expression of the people's love came, and very feelingly was it done. He closed by thanking, in warmest terms, the generous donors for this renewed avowal of their attachment to him, and their confidence in him, and invoked upon them all, and each; upon every household and individual in the congregation, the choicest blessings of heaven.

on the retreat, leaving not a soldier between us and the farm-house.

There was no one in the advance to order me to make an advance, and as we had selected a camping spot, no advance was made. Something kept telling me all the time that Col. Le Ville was near. I could not shake off the voice, and so wandered down the road where the pickets were being stationed. The advance was within a dozen rods of the farm-house. As it had not been disturbed I pushed down alone to the house, following the reserve pickets.

Everything was still around the place, and I saw shadows on the curtains, and finally entered the yard and walked up the path. Nearing the door, I heard a deep, solemn voice reading or repeating a ceremony. Stepping boldly up, followed by the men, I opened the door upon a marriage ceremony. Col. Le Ville, in full uniform, held the hand of Kate Hastings; a minister stood before them, the parents on either side, one or two citizens were there as witnesses. The group was thunder struck, and for a moment no one moved or spoke.

"Good evening, Colonel," I remarked. "Rod invited me, you remember, and I am here."

I held the door so that none of my men had looked into the room. I now whispered to them to go back to the road and look sharp, and then I entered the room.

The clergyman had taken his seat and was greatly frightened, but he was ordered to go on, and no explanations were made until Miss Kate Hastings was Mrs. Col. Le Ville.—Then we explained. There was crying and laughing, and "a regular time," as the old ladies say.

The Colonel did not know that the Confederate rear guard had passed on, but was intending to wed Kate and move south an hour after. He looked at me to read my decision, and Kate leaned on his shoulder and wept that he was again a prisoner.

"What happened?"

"Well, nothing to you. I don't want to hear anything about 'army regulations,' 'conspiracies,' 'court-martials,' and such talk. It is however my opinion that Col. Le Ville got away somehow."

"I was down in the Shenandoah valley a few months ago, and who do you suppose I took dinner with? The Col. looked as bright and happy as a new silver dollar, and Kate was more charming than ever. The war rested hard on both, but peace and love have made the farm house a little paradise, and there was money in the crops growing on every foot of the ground. A curly headed boy was racing around, and he was named after me. If they had not told me this I should not have had the courage to reply that I had a handsome little daughter way up in Michigan named Kate."

Neither Uncle Sam nor Jeff. Davis ever knew how the customs of war were outraged, and it is too late to court-martial either one of us now.—Our Fireside Friend.

Aphonia or Loss of Voice.

This is another of that pestilential brood of diseases which make way so speedily with human life and make it wearisome—not that it is a fatal malady unless it be connected with diseased lungs, when danger of the most fearful kind may be seriously apprehended; that loss of voice which usually affects the larnynx and vocal cords, so common among those who have much speaking to do, is not usually of a dangerous or fatal nature, any more than any other diseased condition is dangerous; but when it is a consequence of diseased lungs and consumption, whose inflammatory borders are investing the mucous lining of the lungs and throat, then it points with almost a fatal finger to a state that ought at once to be remedied; Much better, truly, if it had been cured before it had spread so far, but having spread, there is still hope. Dr. Keyser's Lung Cure, may yet reach the disease, which it surely would have done in the beginning. It will remove from the system all morbid matter which keeps up irritation and disease, and will aid the stomach to make plastic material to repair the wasting organism. Read Dr. Keyser's treatise on chronic lung diseases, which will be sent without charge wherever it is ordered. Price of Lung Cure, $1.50, or 5 bottles for $5. If your druggist does not keep it order from Dr. Keyser, 167 Liberty street, Pittsburgh. Office hours from 10 a.m. until 1 p.m., and from 3 until 6, and Saturday night until 9 o'clock.

A Gay Deceiver.

The Muncy, Pa, Luminary records the following romantic occurence in its last issue: "Forty-eight years ago a young man left this borough, 'between two days,' to avoid arrest upon a warrant sworn out by a young lady, who, it seems, who was left with a little responsibility which she thought should have a father's name as well as a mother's care. Time passed, and the girl then, is now an old woman. The other day a stranger appeared upon our streets whose locks were silvered (as was afterwards learned) by the frosts of seventy-two winters. By some means he was recognized as the truant lover of forty-eight years ago, and his presence in town coming to the ears of the deserted one, she at once had a new warrant issued for him and caused his arrest. That the old gentleman was taken by surprise when waited upon by the constable may easily be imagined; but having been caught in the meshes of the law he determined to make the most of it. A meeting took place before A. B. Pulnam, esq., and negotiations entered into for the amicable settlement of the difficulty, which was finally accomplished by the venerable gentleman paying the injured woman two hundred dollars. This was cheap enough, all things considered. As the old man left town on the first train after he was discharged from custody we suppose he has returned to his home in the west, where he has resided for nearly half a century, no doubt feeling all the better for having discharged an obligation for so many years resting upon him."

'Loved not wisely, but too well,'

☞ TRUTH AND POETRY.—Milton puts into the mouth of Lucifer, in "Paradise Lost," these memorable words—

"TO BE WEAK IS MISERABLE."

Never was truer sentence written than this—supposed to be wrung from the arch-fiend in his impotence and agony. Every victim of nervous debility, or of that depressing languor which is one of the accompaniments of dyspepsia and biliousness, can testify to the misery of mind which they involve. The motive power of the system as partially paralyzed; the mind is haunted by anxiety and fear, and the sufferer is as incapable of applying himself energetically to any kind of business as if he were under the benumbing influence of catalepsy. This terrible mental and physical condition need not, however, be endured for forty-eight hours by any human being. Plantation Bitters is an absolute specific for all the torments which a deranged stomach, a disordered liver, and shattered nerves, superinduce.

☞ Judge Nelson, of the Supreme Court of the United States is very old, and will doubtless retire from the bench at an early day. The gossip about his probable successor has already begun, and President Grant is having any amount of gratuitous advice offered him as to the nomination that ought to be made. The present court is distributed geographically, one to Maine, one to New York, one to Pennsylvania, and one to New Jersey, making four for the North Atlantic States. Ohio has two, Iowa and Illinois one, and California one. The South is not represented in the court, and it is likely, therefore, that a southern man will be appointed.

A Perilous Fall and Wonderful Escape.

The Scranton Republican gives the following particulars of one of the most perilous falls and wonderful escapes upon record:

"Grassy Island shaft, a mile above Olyphant, on Eddy Creek, brought out the hero character of a hero a few days since. The shaft is one of the deepest in the valley. Brian Fallon, the fireman, had occasion to go down the shaft part way upon a platform used for bringing up coal and carrying the miners up and down to their work. After descending to the desired vein he stepped from the platform for a few minutes to attend to some duty in one of the chambers. Returning with a can of oil in his hand and a dim miner's lamp in his cap, he walked forward to the shaft to go up, expecting that the platform still remained where he had left it, instead of being lowered to the bottom, some 300 feet below.

He walked on to step on the platform, as he supposed, and to his horror he started down the dark abyss. As he began to fall he turned a perfect somersault and struck the long chain suspending the platform 300 feet below him. By mere accident he caught and clinched this quick as lightning, as he was falling with all the rapidity his weight could give him. He clung to this for his life, and actually tore the flesh from his fingers before he could arrest his descent, 150 feet from the bottom. Smarting with pain, yet clinging to the huge chain for his deliverance, he called the attention of the engineer to his perilous condition by a loud whistle, and was drawn up on the chain in safety."

Shoeing Oxen for Pavements.

In regard to the matter of shoeing oxen, so that they can work on pavements, Mr. S. P. Ridley writes to the Boston Journal as follows:

"As I have worked twenty-four years at blacksmithing, and claim to be master of my trade, I will give my opinion in regard to shoeing. In the first place, turn the shoe as usual, only a little thicker at the toe, and put a calk on the toe of one inch long one-quarter inch high; heel calk the same. In setting, care should be taken to keep each claw in its natural position—that is spreading them as the ox would usually stand, and also fit the shoe well. Put six nails in each half of the shoe. I have always used the Vulcan No. 6 nail. I have shod cattle in this way that were driven through a river twenty times a day, and they did not lose a shoe for weeks; when if shod the common way they would soon become lame."

A Popular Support Assured.

From The Boston Post (Dem.)

The President has planted the standard of Civil Service Reform where it may prove effective if suffered to remain. It is conceded that some of the same spirit would have worked equally well under the Murphy regime, in the New York Custom-house, but the delay in applying the rules will be gladly overlooked if it has finally expedited their enforcement. Coming directly after his reelection, for which President Grant is reminded that he is the special debtor to Pennsylvania, this reported attitude is quite as commendable as it is remarkable.

It is an excellent resolution for an Administration to start off on, provided it is kept up to the end. The country, regardless of party, will enthusiastically co-operate with the President in his endeavors to bring over the Civil Service to a better basis: and if this vigorous declension of the officious intermeddling of the Cameron Clan is an honest beginning on his part, he may count on a popular support in that matter without the slightest visible tinge of partizan feeling.

ONE of the gentlemen who are now engaged in instructing the public how to prevent great conflagrations, that says 'if a blanket had been steeped in water and hung up in front of the hottest fire in Boston or Chicago, and kept thoroughly drenched by the engines, it would have remained unscorched to the last." He enforces his theory by a statement that "if any one will take a piece of paper, and shaping it like a cup, filling it with water, the paper thus filled may be held close over a gaslight and an egg boiled in the water, and the water itself pass off in steam, yet the paper itself remain unscorched so long as the water shall be supplied to it.

A Kiss or Your Life.

A nice little bit of gossip transpired recently in the vicinity of North Penn square, illustrating the adage, "that people who have the name don't always have the game." A lady, who was in the habit of whiling away an hour or two of her time twice a week in pleasant converse with one of her agreeable gentlemen friends, was rather startled on the occasion of his last visit, to find him coming behind her, and bending down to kiss her; which impertinence she at once resented by slapping him on the face. Suddenly her visitor pulled out a six barrel revolver, and pointed it at her head. Almost frightened to death she dropped into a seat, when he, laughingly apologized, saying he meant it for a joke. The lady soon recovered herself and resumed the conversation, but after a few moments, excused herself for a short time, saying she wished to speak to her servant. Shortly after a "Knight of the Locust Club" entered the room and arrested the morning visitor upon the charge of carrying concealed deadly weapons. The policeman found the revolver, so Mr. was marched to an alderman's office, where he had the pleasure of paying seven dollars and-a-half fine, the lady sweetly assuring him that this was her idea of a practical joke.

Who Henry N. Smith is—He is Frequently in the Habit of carrying $5,000,000 in his Pockets—Look Out for Him To-Day.

Henry N. Smith is known throughout the country as one of the most desperate and successful operators in Wall street. It was he who became so noted at the Black Friday time as the head of the firm of Smith, Gould & Martin; it was he who was in with Fisk in the bold operations against the Erie railway; and it was he who made a corner on greenbacks last winter by carrying $5,000,000 on his person and locking it up in the Tenth national bank—which last operation became the subject of congressional inquiry. Smith came on to Washington and was examined. The committee did not get much comfort out of his answers. They asked him fi he had locked up $5,000,000 in greenbacks. He frankly said he had. They asked him why he did it. He freely acknowledged that he did it to make money by the operation, and wanted to know what the committee intended to do about it. Without answering, the members of the committee asked what right he had to lock up that amount of money. Then he got angry and told them that it was none of their business: that the money was his own and that he could do with it as he liked; and it was about this time that the committee found they had made a mistake. Smith collected about fifty dollars witness fees and returned to New York, and that was the last of the silly investigation.

A gentleman who was a witness before the committee said subsequently that Smith actually carried the $5,000,000 on his person for two days. The lining of his overcoat was filled with pockets, and into these the money was stored. Smith is about thirty five or thirty-eight years of age, short of stature, slight of frame, and red of hair. The latter he wears cut close and his whiskers a la mikitore or mutton chop, with moustache. His name is not Henry Major Henry N. Smith, but Norman Henry Smith. He is a native of Tioga, Pennsylvania, a little village which is shut in with charming grace from the outside world by a circle of hills, which in the fall presents such an enchanting appearance that it clings to one's memory forever. In this pretty little village this monster operator was born, and here he is to this day called plain Tom Smith, a nick-name he got when a baby. It is nothing against Tom that he spent his young days about as other village boys do, and it is nothing against him that he learned the shoemaker's trade and was an excellent workman.

It is said there that Tom Smith can make the best "fine" boot of any man in America. A fine scrape, if I am correctly informed, drove him from his hammer and lap stone and took him to Buffalo a year or two before the war. While there he attended a course of instruction in one of the "Business Colleges" which were common then. From this he operated in Buffalo in a small way, going finally to Albany. He could not long remain in such a place, and he turned his eyes toward New York. His career as a money maker is without a parallel in history. It would be idle to estimate his wealth, for to-day it might be twenty millions and to-morrow ten.

He is called the successor of Jim Fisk, but this is an insult to him. He possesses the same reckless daring, but he brought to his experience a keener and more deliberate judgment and intelligence than Fisk had. Besides he has none of the "flash" qualities which Fisk possessed. He has no desire to display his wealth ostentatiously; he does not care to build an opera house that he may have the privilege of the green room, and he is not likely to run a line of steamers merely to show himself in an admiral's uniform, nor to show himself at the head of a regiment at the cost of thousands of dollars. He lives as becomes a very wealthy man, and owns a number of the best horses that money could buy, merely for his own driving. He has considerable money invested in real estate in his native town, where he has provided handsomely for his father and mother.

A Revolutionary Relic.

On the parlor table of Captain Wm. Wilson Potter, of Bellefonte, may be seen any day by asking, no less a relic than the flag of the Royal Grenadiers, captured on the field of Monmouth by his (maternal) grandfather, the late Judge Wm. Wilson, of Chilquaqua Mill, Northumberland county, Pa.

The ground is light-yellow, heavy corded silk; five feet four inches by four feet eight.

The device at the upper corner is the English Union, always on the Royal standards of Great Britain. It is composed of the Cross of St. George to denote England, and St. Andrew's Cross in the form of an X, to denote Scotland. This device was placed on the corner of the royal flag, after the accession of James the Sixth of Scotland, on the throne of England as James, First. The field of the device is blue, the central stripes (Cross of St. George) red, the marginal ones white.

The ring appears to have been wrenched from the staff and has a few old dust marks on the device; other-wise it looks as bright and new as if it had just come from the gentle fingers that made it, although nine-four years have rolled away since its golden folds drooped in the sultry air of that June-day battle.—Bellefonte Republican.

Tumor of 12 Years' Growth Cured by Radway's Resolvent.

BOSTON, Mass., July 10, 1865.

DR. RADWAY:—I have had Ovarian Tumor in the ovaries and bowels. All the Doctors said there was no help for it. I tried every thing that was recommended, but nothing helped me. I saw your Resolvent, and thought I would try it; but had no faith in it, because I had suffered for twelve years. I took six bottles of the Resolvent, and one box of Radway's Pills, and two bottles of your Ready Relief; and there is not a sign of tumor to be seen or felt, and I feel better, smarter, and happier than I have for twelve years. The tumor went away in the left side of the bowels, over the groin. I write this to you for the benefit of others. You can publish it if you choose. HANNAH P. KNAPP.
